LEAVE A LIGHT ON.

Three years after Duskhold, the Ceilings are breaking all over Caldor. Lex Vey teaches at a forge with twenty anvils. His brother Antho keeps a mountain hung with eleven hundred lanterns. The world is finally, cautiously free.

Then people start disappearing. Not killed. Unwritten. Cut out of the Lattice so completely that their own families forget they were ever born. And the man doing it carries one piece of an ancient key, forged nine hundred years ago from a Founder's own shadow.

To stop him, Lex must cross a desert of glass, enter the four elemental Wellworlds and forge something that has never been made, while Antho crosses a grey river that takes the one memory you'd least want to lose. Because on the far side of the darkness, someone has been holding a door shut for eleven years.

And she's their mother.
